Franchising

J. Jacques Gelman
Professor no Departamento de Mercadologia da EAESP/FGV.

Em 1964, reconhecendo a importância econômica e social do fortalecimento da pequena empresa comercial, o governo norte-americano abria uma linha de crédito no valor de US$ 25 mil a todos os pequenos empresários que estivessem interessados em aderir ao sistema de comercialização conhecido por franchising. Em 1965, cerca de 340 mil estabelecimentos comerciais já operavam através desse sistema e, em 1968, mais de 450 mil estabelecimentos representavam um quarto das vendas no varejo daquele país, ou seja, 10% do seu produto nacional bruto. Segundo o Departamento de Comércio Americano, as vendas pelo sistema de franchising nos EUA totalizaram, em 1985, US$ 529 bilhões, representando um terço de vendas do comércio varejista. Uma definição de franchising não é fácil, tendo em vista a existência de sistemas variados e distintos, todos operando sob o mesmo rótulo. Robert Rosenberg define franchising como sendo um sistema que visa a distribuição seletiva de bens e/ou serviços sob uma determinada marca através de estabelecimentos comerciais de propriedade de comerciantes, independentes, chamados franchisees. Muito embora o franchisor supra o franchisee com know-how e uma identificação pela marca, o franchisee goza do direito ao lucro e corre os riscos do negócio. O franchisor controla a distribuição de seus bens e/ou serviços através de um contrato que regula as atividades do franchisee a fim de que estabeleça uma padronização.
